Paul Kekai Manansala In the concept of the fractal kingship, the condition of the leader mirrors that of the land or vice versa.

The Fisher King [from Wikipedia]

"In Arthurian legend the Fisher King, or the Wounded King, is the last in a long line charged with keeping the Holy Grail. Versions of his story vary widely, but he is always wounded in the legs or groin and incapable of moving on his own.

In the Fisher King legends, he becomes impotent and unable to perform his task himself, and he also becomes unable to father or support a next generation to carry on after his death. His kingdom suffers as he does, his impotence affecting the fertility of the land and reducing it to a barren wasteland. All he is able to do is fish in the river near his castle, Corbenic, and wait for someone who might be able to heal him. Healing involves the expectation of the use of magic."

"There's no battery technology that's even close to allowing us to take all of our energy from renewables and be able to use battery storage in order to deal not only with the 24-hour cycle but also with long periods of time where it's cloudy and you don't have sun or you don't have wind," Gates said.

"Power is about reliability. We need to get something that works reliably."

Glad that he's investing but some facts here are wrong. Solar panels still generate electricity on cloudy days. It's only at night that they don't produce, although future panels may be able to produce using star, Moon and urban light (like that from vehicle headlights).

Also, there are many, many places --both inland and coastal/offshore -- that are practically always windy, night and day, year-around.

Bill Gates is doubling his billion-dollar bet on renewables

And he says the government should put a multiple of that into R&D, just like it did with the Manhattan and Apollo projects.

Paul Kekai Manansala "Such claims bring to mind Solheim's (1984-1985: 81) positing of an "Nusantao" (or 'island people') community of traders who spoke an Austronesian "barter language"; however, they differ from it in one crucial respect. Whereas Donohue and Denham (to appear) and McWhorter (to appear) view contact-induced simplification as something that happened to earlier, more complex, varieties of Austronesian, Solheim (1984-1985) identifies this trade language with proto-Austronesian itself. As pointed out by Blench (2012: 132), Solheim's position is untenable, since "[t]rade languages are dispersed, and have simplified lexicon and grammar, as well as poorly developed ethnoscientific lexicon and a lack of poetic and hierarchical registers.

Austronesian looks nothing like this". But while proto-Austronesian and many of its descendants most certainly do not resemble trade languages, the point being made by Donohue and Denham and by McWhorter is that, pace Blench, many other Austronesian languages spoken in Nusantara do indeed look like the possible descendants of trade languages or of other kinds of languages having undergone contact-induced simplification."
